

KING OF HIS KIND

A Cool-Headed Man Who has no Confidants.

KING OF THE SAFE-BLOWERS

Dashing Donna Madixia, Who is Making a Spirited Fight for a Big Sum of Money.

The detectives at Cincinnati have arrested James Coleman, alias Connelly, alias Rogers, a lot more, and though they arrested him on suspicion only, yet from the way the evidence is pouring in they are in a fair way to prove him the champion safe blower of the world.

The peculiarity of his case is that he has no vices and no confidants; he never goes "rattled" when arrested, is never, or very seldom, drunk when at liberty; tells nobody where he came from or where he lives, and is altogether a very strange, reserved, gentlemanly fellow. He is undoubtedly the man who invented a perfectly sure method of blowing safes open with nitro-glycerine—an achievement which rendered the old time lock, once so trusted, almost useless.

He was caught in Cincinnati in 1881 with burglary tools in his possession, and after a short imprisonment, a few days after his release the safe of the treasurer of Loudon county, Tenn., was blown open and $15,000 taken. The burglars were caught and most of the cash recovered. As one of them was with Coleman when found the latter was taken too, but soon released, as there was no proof against him. It now appears that the actual burglars were his pupils, and he had instructed them how to introduce liquid nitro-glycerine into a safe by exhausting the air in it and thus creating a suction at the one crevice left open. A detonating fuse finished the job, and the safe was literally blown to shreds.

Coleman or Connelly then went east and took high rank as a teacher of burglary. Having amassed $20,000 he went to England and had a high time, after which he made a "professional tour" of Canada and New York. This ended at Auburn, N. Y., where one of the gang had his career suddenly ended by a policeman's bullet, and Coleman was shot in the leg, but escaped. It is an odd fact that Sheriff Foutte, of Loudon county, Tenn., who captured the three burglars, turned crook himself, and is now in the penitentiary at Nashville on a fourteen years' sentence for embezzlement and other crimes. As for Coleman, alias Connelly, alias, etc., his career as a professor in the school for burglary is probably ended.

DASHING DONNA MADIXIA.

She is Making a Spirited Fight for a Big Sum of Money.

Millionaire William B. Daniels, of Denver, had his body burned to keep his wife from getting it. That's the substance of the story, though there are many exciting and amusing variations. He did not seem to care much about his money, for he readily gave her $100,000 to agree to a separation, and added $30,000 to it with a little solicitation, besides leaving his wife so loosely drawn and his divorce so badly drawn that she will probably get a third of all he left. But as to his remains he was extra particular.

He was the scolar master of the dry goods firm of Daniels & Fisher, of Denver, and found his partner and executors very carefully as to his corpse. The result was that it was taken to Detroit and turned to ashes in the big crematory there, after which the ashes, handsomely incensed, were placed by the grave of his first wife in Rose Hill cemetery, Chicago. That wife left a son, now on the way home from China, and that son would get all the $250,000 left by Mr. Daniels (for his second wife had no issue) were it not for a certain Senora or Donna Madixia with whom he became infatuated a few years ago, whom he married, and from whom he thought he was divorced, but probably wasn't.

She was gay, grand, gorgeous, and he was her third husband. Her first died, and from her second she was divorced, and she then attained to some prominence as an elocutionist, and was a tall, splendid looking lady when Mr. Daniels met her. She said she was going to make him marry her, and she did. Thereafter her life was a poem—a roaring epic. Her dresses, all made in Paris, cost her from $2,000 to $10,000 each. Her carriage and team were the amazement of Denver. She was beautiful, witty, lively, fascinating and enjoyed all sorts of company at all sorts of hours. But she was virtuous. At least they never succeeded in proving the contrary after the most exhaustive research. Daniels knew her to quit, as aforesaid. She went to Europe and spent $75,000, and now the question for the Colorado courts is, Was the divorce he got in her absence legal?

As she is smart and handsome, and still has money enough to pay lawyers, the chances are pretty good that she will get third of that $250,000 which will enable her to enjoy another extensive trip to Europe. A good deal can be done in Paris with $83,333.33, you know. When she returned from abroad she went to Mr. Daniels' house in Denver and took possession. His agent and four bodyguards tried to put her out, but she held all five at bay with a six shooter, and they were laughed out of Denver. This is only one of her minor exploits, for she is a crack shot and a daring rider, a fairly good boxer and splendid talker.

A Drunkard's Suicide.

The spectacle of a man gashing his throat with a pocketknife started pedestrians passing through Hart street, near Bushwick avenue, Brooklyn, at 7 o'clock one evening recently. An ambulance call was sent in to St. Catherine's hospital. The surgeon found the injury to be an abrasion of the skin. The wound was dressed and the man placed under arrest.

He is Henry Harms, 28 years old, and employed as driver by the Budweiser Brewing company. He was drunk at the time he attempted suicide.
